The Workers' Compensation Act, 1979

BACKGROUND TO SASKATCHEWAN'S COMPENSATION SYSTEM

Saskatchewan's system of workers' compensation was founded in 1930 by a coalition of business and labour to provide compensation for workplace injury that would protect both employers and workers from the inequities and unpredictable nature of litigation and individual liability. Both employers and workers contributed to the arrangement. Workers waived their right to sue their employer for injuries and losses caused by workplace injury, and employers assumed responsibility for the cost of the compensation system. By striking this bargain, employers and workers turned an adversarial relationship defined by the court system, into a working partnership that provides for fairness, protection and economic stability.

The Saskatchewan Workers' Compensation Board (WCB) and its Board Members act as trustees of the bargain between employers and workers by adhering to the five basic principles set out in 1930: no-fault compensation, security of benefits, collective employer liability, independence of the Board, and exclusive jurisdiction. These principles have been tested during the WCB's seventy year history, but continue as the essential elements of a compensation system highly regarded as among the most successful in North America.

The WCB's obligations are set out in The Workers' Compensation Act, 1979. One such obligation is maintaining fully-funded status by raising sufficient funds to cover the costs of the compensation system. In doing so, the WCB observes two of its founding principles: security of benefits (providing for all future costs of current injuries) and collective liability (ensuring costs are shared through assessments paid by employers). If the WCB does not maintain fully-funded status, the Act provides the provincial government with the authority to require fully-funded status. Saskatchewan is one of only a few Canadian compensation systems with a continuing history of fully-funded status. Both employers and workers benefit from the financial stability and predictability that results from fully-funded status.

Covering the Cost of the Compensation System

The WCB has two sources of revenue: employer assessments based on payroll and return on investments. Employer assessments, or rates, are determined annually by the projected costs of compensation and the injury record, or experience record, for the employer's industry classification. There are 59 employer industry classifications used by the WCB. Rates vary considerably between classifications, depending upon injury experience and cost. Extensive discussions with employer associations are held before rates are set each year. For the 2002 rate setting process, 28 employer meetings were held, involving more than 70 employer/trade associations representing nearly 100 per cent of employers.

The rate setting process is rooted in the premise that the cost of today's injuries will be borne by today's employers. A review of the WCB's history of rate setting shows the merits of this approach, and the advantages both employers and workers realize when their compensation system rests on secure financial footing.

Employer Assessments — Value of Assessments Paid

The assessments paid into the compensation system provide a number of values to employers:

- paying the full cost of current injury claims and future liabilities on current claims;
- debt recovery for shortfalls in previous years' assessments;
- protection against the legal costs and court awards which would occur if the compensation did not exist.

Each Saskatchewan employer will be notified by letter of specific 2002 rates, based on the safety and injury experience of the employer's industry classification.

2002 PROVISIONAL ASSESSMENT RATES

Pursuant to subsection 135(4) of the Workers' Compensation Act, 1979, the following are the 2002 provisional assessment rates for those industry classifications that exceed preceding year assessment by more than 10.5%.
